COUNTING

Kevin Sullivan made a stab at class analysis in “And Inequality For All,” (Aug. 7), saying “It is near impossible, however, to draw a bead on the wealthiest Eugeneans.” That’s not the “end of story,” however. Colorful income maps for all of Oregon show wealth distribution patterns by sections of neighborhood, city and county. Pie charts break it down for cities.

Eugene had 1,956 households making over $200,000 in 2009 during the Great Recession. There were 1,791 making over $150,000 and 1,776 taking in more than $125,000. These 5,423 households comprised 10 percent of Eugene’s total. This could be mapped onto the public disclosure list of the 5,077 Eugeneans contributing large amounts to political campaigns from 2006 to 2014.

It lists them by name and occupation, though many are retired. Coordinating these with actual residences is fairly easy, though time consuming. News stories and business statistics add interest. The income map shows high levels up in the hills and lower ones in the flatlands. North Eugene and parts of west Eugene were moderately wealthy, too. In South Eugene, though, income and elevation are coordinated.

Divining the 1 percent, or the richest 500 households in Eugene, would require research, but it’s not impossible to find them. Many don’t want to hide. We’re still in a roaring, plutocratic era. Characterizing the top 10 percent, or 5,000 households, would be more useful for a class analysis looking at wealth and power of the elite, like the sociologist C. Wright Mills did for America during the last century.

AWKWARD MOMENTS

I appreciated Sally Sheklow’s description of the “awkwardness” of saying “my wife” in public conversation [“Living Out” column, 8/7]. As a parent with a gay son and son-in-law, I know that most people are not used to hearing anyone refer casually to “my son and his husband.”

I try to talk about my gay son in the same way that I talk about my straight daughters. I never announce that my daughters are straight, so I don’t need to announce that my son is gay. But it would be routine for me to say, “My daughter and her husband are visiting me, and we’re going to the fair.” So I can say, “My son and his husband are coming to Eugene, and we’re taking the kids to the wave pool.”

This works because there is no announcement requiring a response. The conversation can move on gracefully even if the person I am speaking to is startled by the incidental mention of my gay son.

This simple formula never fails me. Anytime I consider how to phrase a statement about my son, I try the sentence substituting a straight daughter, and it is easy to tell if it works.

If everyone who has gay children, siblings, or friends would acknowledge them in routine conversations, the awkwardness of these references will disappear.

EXPIRED TAX HIKE

Responding to “Inequality for All” [cover story, 8/7]: The most important paragraph talked about how in 2010 Oregonians voted yes on Measure 66, increasing taxes on individuals earning over $250,000 a year. And then the state Legislature allowed it to expire in 2012.

This is worthy of an article. Who allowed this and are they still in office? These are the legislators who are not doing as the people wish. Vote.

MEDICARE FOR ALL

Raging Grannies celebrated Medicare’s

49th birthday in front of Lane County’s Health Department! Health Care For All Eugene members loved having the Grannies share this special event and remind everyone that improved Medicare is really what we want for everybody in Oregon. They also remind us that a raising of the eligibility age from 65 to 67, with additional cuts to Medicare and Medicaid, is not acceptable! Cutting Social Security or Medicare is not acceptable!

HCAO asks their supporters to call the Capitol switchboard (866) 220-0044 and request to be connected to their representatives or senators. A truly universal health care system that will reduce the deficit and save American lives will also save us $500 billion a year just on health care costs.

The rest of the world is watching our failing health care system. Can we make the changes needed? Join their monthly meeting at 7 pm the first Tuesday of the month at First United Methodist Church, 1376 Olive St.

State Law vs. Natural Law

SPRINGFIELD’S SEAVEY LOOP PLANS DRAW FIRE

Along Seavey Loop Road winding all the way to Hwy. 58, “Stop Seavey Loop Industrial Zone” signs have cropped up over the past few weeks on almost every property. The two-lane blacktop runs through floodplain rich in farmland and natural areas nurtured by the Coast Fork of the Willamette River and Oxley Slough and overseen by Mount Pisgah rising gently in the east. The signs are an expression of solid resistance in a neighborhood unified in its opposition to the Springfield City Council’s decision to sweep part of the Seavey Loop area into its urban growth boundary (UGB) overflow and open it up to industrial development.

On Aug. 6, in the shade of one of Buford-Mount Pisgah’s large white oaks, neighbors and other concerned citizens met with State Rep. Phil Barnhart and State Sen. Lee Beyer to put their passionate and often eloquent voices behind the signage. Chief organizer Charles Stewart, a Seavey organic farmer, began with an announcement that the Straub family, relatives of the former governor and owners of 56 acres of Seavey Loop land critical to Springfield’s UGB proposal, have abandoned their neutrality and joined neighbors in the fight against expansion and industrialization.

A dozen speakers highlighted the deep-rooted cultural history of the area, the callousness and absurdity of imposing industry on its fragile ecology, the impact of industrial pollution on the land, the lives and the living of local farmers and residents, and its place in the joint city-county scheme to urbanize and industrialize the I-5 corridor from Springfield through the Lane Community College basin to Goshen. Planners refer to the proposed industrial area as College View.

In response, the guests of honor paid lip service to the beauty and fertility of the surrounds without, however, recognizing the importance of the area’s farms and farmers to the local economy and to food security now and in a future plagued by population and development pressures and depleted resources. To the contrary, Barnhart insisted that “Oregon is an industrial state” and that the economy needs and will have industry, implying that industrialization of the gateway to Pisgah is both desirable and inevitable.

Both legislators encouraged the audience to voice their concerns at upcoming city and county sessions on UGB expansion. But they know the system is rigged against equitable and meaningful participation by the legislative requirement that local jurisdictions provide a 20-year supply of buildable lands, a toxic recipe for exponential growth well beyond its pull date.

Given the unwillingness to address population control, land-use protections weakened or eliminated by development interests and complicit administrators and politicians and the inevitable environmental and social degradation as a consequence, the expansion of urban growth boundaries is axiomatic.

The common corollary, “It’s a state law; we have no choice,” justifies every invasion — as if the 40-year-old buildable lands mandate, established in a bygone era, were an edict from God and immutable. To eliminate this requirement, as anachronistic and destructive as the General Mining Law of 1872, is both a choice and an obligation.

Expanding to meet state law, Springfield runs into natural law: Any direction it chooses to expand is already occupied by wetlands, rivers and streams, farmland, forestland and mountain. Given these topographical limitations, it’s unfortunate that Barnhart and Beyer were not asked where the farms will grow and how the rivers will flow as UGBs expand into infinity.

In a bid to the farmers and sympathizers in the crowd, Beyer properly praised Hector McPherson, a farmer, as the progenitor of SB 100, but in the same breath chose to damn Tom McCall as a mere opportunist given the credit due to McPherson and Bob Straub. Beyer should be counseled that without McCall’s passionate and articulate commitment to comprehensive, regulated land-use protections and his tireless public advocacy — qualities conspicuously absent in every state legislator and governor since — Oregon’s nationally recognized land-use program would likely have died an early death, or never been born.

Early in the session, someone asked if there were any Springfield city councilors, planners or Lane County commissioners present. We looked around but couldn’t find any.

and the smoke wafts all around you while waiting for food. Horrible! I think the smoking section should be a fenced area that is actually outside the venue area so non-smokers can breath without being accosted by secondhand smoke.

TYPOCIDE RAP

First they came for Comic Sans, and I did not speak out — &#8232 — because I did not spec Comic Sans. Then they came for Helvetica — hold it right there, typography bigots! This is Eugene! This is our alternative community newspaper, Eugene Weekly! We honor diversity and respect all typefaces, from the lowly, common Times Roman, to the regal Goudy Old Style.

Helvetica is one of the most respected, legible and readable typefaces in the whole wide world. I bet you don't know that it's named for a country, eh, right, smartypants? The most neutral and well-designed country in the whole wide world.

Even if you want to disparage that copyright-avoiding bastard Arial, I won't stand for it. Nosireebob, you snobby sans serif hater. All typefaces deserve love and respect. Oh, and stop showing your ignorance! A "font" is not a "typeface." Look it up, Mr. Knowitall.

So, don't come to our happy little town spouting your hateful hate and willfully ignorant aesthetics, because we won't allow it, Bub. We will stand up to you bigots and hug all typefaces close to our bosoms, protecting them from your disgusting talk of typocide. Take your vile opinions to Springfield (some other Springfield, not ours — try Missouri or maybe Kentucky). We don't need your kind here!

PS: Please don't set this letter in Eurostyle Bold Extra-Expanded. That's only used by engineers and student architects. Thanks. BTW, that Whit Party cover was rather ugly, but it's fishwrap now.

THE GREEN CORRIDOR

An open letter to the Springfield mayor: The intent of this letter is to share my opinion regarding the proposed expansion of the Urban Growth Boundary to include an area of Seavey Loop and develop it as an industrial area. This project is going to encounter some very serious opposition from different stakeholders far and wide. Not just the local residents are ready to get involved in this issue.

As a resident of south Eugene and a frequent visitor to the Seavey Loop area where I find pleasure, healing and relaxation when hiking in the Mount Pisgah complex of trails, kayaking on the Coast Fork of the Willamette or also when my wife and I come to the area to buy or pick local agricultural products, I can assure you that we feel very invested in this green corridor to the [Mount Pisgah] Arboretum. The thought of having this natural Oregon gem being tarnished by further development is a source of outrage.

The presence of small, family-owned farms in this area so close to Eugene and Springfield is an incomparable asset for local residents and it deserves to be protected. It's linked with food security. I am wondering if the current work on Franklin Boulevard is in any way linked to the city of Springfield's need for growth. Is the installation of a new sewer line linked in any way to the project of industrializing the Seavey Loop area?

In light of the historic drought that is impacting most of the Western states, and considering that California's Central Valley, once known as a global breadbasket, is turning into an arid desert, it might be wise to foresee a future where fertile alluvial lands such as the Willamette Valley (and Seavey Loop) will soon become strategically important for food production while we still have sufficient water for irrigation. Laying concrete and asphalt over fertile lands and possibly polluting nearby farms is tantamount to being an agent of collapse. We humans need fruits and veggies more than gravel and crushed rock to survive.

COLOSSAL MISTAKE

National Public Radio eliminated my favorite show, Michel Martin's Tell Me More. The airwaves have nothing like this program. It fills a crucial need in the community. Many folks have no contact with people of color and only learn about racial issues from the media, which, in general, does a dismal job. Michele is artful in her ability to get people to listen and learn.

So I wrote to NPR to register my dismay and was told that NPR plans to "infuse Michel Martin's perspectives into every aspect of our journalism." The problem with this is the glaring reality that we are losing a woman of color as the head host and replacing her with a white guy. How do young women/girls of color imagine themselves as the host of a radio show if they don't hear themselves reflected by a woman of color? Listening to her confident and intelligent voice gives us all a view into what reality can and must sound like on radio. As NPR's new CEO pointed out in an interview with Michel, on one of her last shows, a majority of NPR listeners are white; all the more reason to position voices of color in publicly heard leadership roles. It is vital to create the climate in the microcosm that we say we want in the macrocosm.

In my opinion, NPR has made a colossal mistake by replacing Tell Me More with On Point. I have been listening every day trying to give On Point a chance. But, for me, this program falls flat. It sounds like more of the same NPR white male hosted programming, while Michel Martin's voice and guests woke us up. We need to hear more racial diversity in radio's choice of hosts and subject matter.

SCHOOL GARDENS

Thanks for the great article about the Spencer Butte Middle School garden ("Learning to Grow," EW, 8/14) and congratulations to principal BJ Blake, Keith Fiedler and the Spencer Butte team of teachers and students who make it happen. While not every school chooses to move the produce from their garden into the cafeteria, it's a great option for those who do. Having cooperation from Nutrition Services staff is crucial to success.

Many schools in Lane County — including 4J, Bethel, Springfield and Crow-Applegate-Lorane public schools — have developed educational vegetable gardens that focus on science and STEM curricula, while teaching kids to plant, maintain, harvest and eat the produce they grow. While not supplying much produce directly to the cafeteria, this approach offers the option of increasing garden diversity, letting plants go to flower to reinforce lessons on pollinators, and still encouraging students to "graze" the vegetables they grow directly from the garden.

Both university studies and our own observations indicate that kids who grow vegetables in a school garden are more likely to learn to like them. That's important because Lane County's Community Health Improvement Plan calls out farm to school and school garden education as key components for addressing childhood obesity, one of the five priority health issues identified in the plan.

We appreciate the shout out to School Garden Project at the end of the article. We depend on more than 100 volunteers each year to help us deliver our garden education programs in Lane County schools. For those interested in helping this year, there are three volunteer trainings scheduled between September and October. Email info@schoolgardenproject.org or call 541-284-1001 for details and registration. Thank you!

THE SLUSH/HUSH FUND

Michael Gottfredson is off down the road, all his idea, so the public is told. That $940,000? Why, 'twas just a gift — nothing to do with any rift.

See, we have this fund, code name "slush," or upon occasion, code name "hush," and we'll spend the dough as we see fit. Not a damn thing, you can do 'bout it.

We're the "new sheriff in town," so give us space, as we see fit, to run this place. And if our actions, you don't like, go join Michael on his well-paid hike.

GOODWILL PRICING

The WTF? photo in the Slant column July 31 was amusing. The pricing conflict likely occurred because Goodwill moved to regional standardized pricing several years ago and it was too much work to peel off the old sticker.

Who determines the prices on items and what is that based on? Goodwill prices are standardized and based on the fair market value sheet, which provides the price at which stores are able to sell donated items. These prices have been carefully researched over a period of years and reflect the current fair market value of each item listed.

This sheet is for donor valuation and not for setting prices, so it's not quite the full answer. Their official pricing list is much more detailed and updated regularly. It is not publicly available.

Prior to price standardization, stores were able to independently set prices on the donated merchandise. The problem was that a systematic bias occurred in that urban, inner-city Goodwill stores had higher prices. While this was said to have been related to higher rents and upkeep in urban settings, it also amounted to a sort of economic class discrimination.

Corporatization of the stores standardized procedures and prices, including becoming more selective as to what items they accepted as donations. Their model has shifted toward taking in more dollars to finance new and remodeled buildings, corporate salaries and work centers for rehab training. Their current operating model still helps disadvantaged persons receive work training and experience. Unfortunately, the stores no longer have discretion to benefit those in need directly and cannot respond to urgent needs.

LET THE PEOPLE LEAD THE WAY

My nerve held until I landed in San Antonio. But with my family a single two-hour flight away after 10 months deployed and two weeks of traveling, I panicked. Racing to an airport gift shop, I searched madly for something to win over my daughter when I arrived home.

Though unsure at seeing me, pure joy greeted the stuffed brown horsie. Definitely the best $8.99 I ever spent.

From winning over my daughter to the initial dreamlike days with my wife, from a morning beach run without armed protection to hearing screeching tires and not grabbing a sidearm, the initial days back from Afghanistan were euphoric.

The euphoria faded unpredictably. Watching my daughter at play and imagining the fate of the three Afghan girls who sold pashminas outside our base. Sharing stories with civilian friends and falling into the awkward pause after they ask, “So, did you kill anybody?” Checking the news and realizing an Afghan soldier gunned down a general I occasionally briefed.

It is easy to lose yourself in the dark moments.

Fortunately, the same day I touched down in the U.S., my Oregon bar exam books arrived, providing focus during the weeks that followed. Still, on the morning of the bar exam in the Jantzen Beach Red Lion, I had to remind myself to smile and nod after a nervous examinee exclaimed, “I don’t think I’ve ever been more terrified!” The memory of forcing myself into the earth while squeezing rounds from a service pistol as bullets whizzed overhead crowded out the polite reaction.

It can be awkward to sit with peers after going through such divergent life experiences. I recall joining a law student committee and listening to a potential law school hire discuss his background as a State Department legal advisor during the 2011 Libya operations.

“The challenge,” he explained knowingly, “was finding the legal distinction between the ongoing operations and ‘hostilities’ requiring Congressional approval. The intra-governmental struggles between the State Department and the White House Office of Legal Counsel over potentially illegal actions were epic.”

Having participated briefly in the Libya mission, I interjected, pointing out that when an F-15 crashed on a bombing mission outside Benghazi and the personnel recovery team went in to recover the two pilots, it hadn’t seemed like a challenge to understand what hostilities were.

In the silence that followed, I realized I might have done better if I’d simply belched loudly.

War, leaders declared after World War I, is too serious to be left to the military. Having gone back and forth between uniforms and law books, I have concluded it is also too important to be left to lawyers. Watching the fallout from the Libya operations and the politicization of its consequences, clearly more than smart legal arguments are needed to ensure sending in troops or drones is a wise decision.

After the torture of the Bush years, President Obama campaigned on a platform of restoring limits on executive power. But as American forces return to Iraq again, on the President’s unilateral orders, one remembers the evolution of Thomas Jefferson. Once a vociferous voice for limited executive power, the views from the presidency transformed him. When purchasing the Louisiana Territory from France over the inaction of Congress, an act outside the explicit presidential powers, Jefferson wrote, “It is the case of a guardian, investing the money of his ward . . . saying to him when of age, I did this for your good.”

Two centuries later, faced with exigent crises, leaders continue to believe that the American polity has not reached maturity.

It is hard to disagree after watching the bewildered response to President Obama seeking Congressional authorization to act in Syria following the use of chemical weapons. Further in the past, President Clinton’s request for military authorization to prevent a 1999 genocide in Kosovo resulted in a mind-bending tie vote in the House of Representatives.

Clinton cites America’s failure to act during the slaughter of the 1994 Rwandan genocide as his greatest regret in office, a regret that drove his 1999 actions. There can be little doubt that a failure to prevent the ongoing genocide against religious minorities in Iraq would be similarly appalling. But in a vibrant democracy, the moral feelings in the Oval Office, no matter how admired the occupant, should not dictate military intervention.

Diverse, if isolated, voices in Congress seek to show there is air left in the tires of American democracy. Senators ranging from firebrand Ted Cruz and libertarian-leaning Rand Paul to former Democratic Party chairman Tim Kaine and Oregon’s own Jeff Merkley have demanded that Congress asserts its proper role in military deliberations.

With most of America disengaged from these decisions — perhaps a result of the all-volunteer military’s distance from the general public — change seems unlikely. Even today the legitimacy of American bombs dropped on enemy fighters and American advisors steering the combat operations of allied forces is again open to question.

I never served in Iraq, but the discord following the Afghan presidential election, the vibrancy of the Taliban in Pakistan, and the survival of al-Qaeda leaders in that nation make clear that American involvement in Central Asia will continue for years to come as well. Watching the label of “terrorist” become the new “communist,” justifying American strikes around the world, one senses entry into an age of permanent conflict.

Since returning, the most common questions I’ve heard are, “What do you think is going to happen next? And what should we do now?” People seem eager for special knowledge from someone who has been “on the ground.” But honestly, I can offer little more than questioners can uncover themselves with minimal research. Instead, I find the value of service in Afghanistan is the feeling of responsibility that flows from knowing the people we seek to help and sharing in the sacrifice that makes that help possible.

That responsibility is not something that should be felt only by servicemembers, or by government leaders. After all, your tax dollars pay for the bombs we drop and your civic participation — through action or inaction — enables decisions on when American blood is spilled, where we spill the blood of others, and if the killing of innocents goes unchallenged.

I am proud to have served in Afghanistan, and would proudly don a uniform to protect the Yazidi of northern Iraq. But examining the last decade of national debates it seems national consensus, formed through constitutional process and civic debate, is critical to making American military power a long-lasting, positive force in the world.

With my wife soon to have our second child, America again joins the clash of arms in Iraq. With so many children already having lost so much, I often wonder what this new baby will endure.

Coming home to Oregon, the birthplace of the Oregon System, the land of Mark Hatfield and Wayne Morse, where civic virtue is a public nature, I cannot help but hope that a truly participatory American body politic is possible. If there is one place that can blaze a trail for the nation, through barren wastelands of apathy and yawning ravines of factionalism, it is Oregon. Growing up in this community gave me the faith to serve at the ends of the earth, leaving everything behind, for the promise of a world made better for my children. Please help that promise come true.

POLICE OFFICER SHOOTS DOG, PROMPTS PROTESTS

In Springfield on Tuesday, Aug. 12, a dog named Kiki was shot in the head by a Springfield police officer responding to what police say was a vicious dog call. Such shootings have happened all over the country — in July, a police officer in Idaho shot a Labrador through the glass window of a van it was sitting in. The window was partially open and the officer thought it was lunging at him.

Local animal advocates didn't think such a shooting could happen in Lane County. Now that it has, they want to ensure family pets are not shot and that police make an effort to avoid firing guns in local neighborhoods.

Although the situations vary, along with breed and police officer repercussions, a few facts remain constant: Dog shootings that happen all over the country are in residential neighborhoods, generally involve large dogs and have witness statements that contradict the official police report, challenging the meaning of "threatening" and "aggressive."

According to the Springfield Police Department, two people called in at around 7 pm to report a pit bull on the loose. After an officer arrived on the scene and saw the barking dog on the sidewalk, he tried to contact the owners by going to the house that bystanders had pointed out. The police department says this was when the dog became aggressive and came at the officer, charging at the retreating officer and lunging. The officer shot her in the face. Kiki survived.

"Two feet away from the animal with a 40 caliber gun? She shouldn't be here right now. The way he shot her, he was aiming to kill her," says Kiki's owner Breonna Kerr, who may receive a citation from the city of Springfield because the dog got out of her yard. Kerr says that the police response alarmed neighbors who were outside at the time. "They're upset that the dog was shot in the head, but they're also upset that a cop would use such excessive force with a gun in a residential neighborhood with kids present."

No animal control officers were available at the time of the shooting, and multiple witnesses contradict the official police statement, according to TV station KEZI and Kerr, saying Kiki was only barking and not acting aggressively.

A protest held by Springfield citizens outside the police department on Aug. 14 supported Kiki and her owner, Kerr, as well as pit bulls as a misrepresented breed.

"We'd like to see more education and less full-force gun power to stop the dog," says Darla Waldrip, who attended the protest and works with dogs locally through her business, Connecting with K9s. "A lot of dogs that have been shot have been kill shots straight to the head. They haven't been shots to the shoulder or something to deter the dog; they're wanting to stop the dog permanently."

Waldrip, Kerr and other animal advocates call for police training on how to deal with domesticated dogs using nonlethal methods like catchpoles, pepper spray or Tasers. In Roseburg, the Douglas County Low-Cost Veterinary Services provided care for a dog shot by Myrtle Creek police last month. The group launched a campaign called "Don't Shoot" to address the problem of police officers shooting pets rather than using nonlethal control.

Springfield Chief of Police Tim Doney says he supports his officer's actions and the department is interested in revamping its training, including animal control and police interaction with domesticated animals.

The bullet went through Kiki's left temple, where it became lodged into her left shoulder, and will require a $2,000 surgery to remove it. To make a tax-deductible donation, contact Save the Pets at savethepets.net. For more on "Don't Shoot" go to wkly.ws/1sy. — Anna V. Smith

HAPPENING PEOPLE

BY PAUL NEEVEL

FRANK GIBSON

In Greenville, Michigan, where Frank Gibson grew up, the major local employer was the Gibson Refrigerator Company. "My great-grandfather, my grandfather and my father ran the company," Gibson says, but the factory was sold when he was a child.

After high school, he dropped out of Kalamazoo College, moved to California and spent four years as a hot-air balloonist. It took 10 hours of training to get a license," he says. "I flew charter flights, promotions and training, all over the U.S., Mexico and Central America." He returned to school at UC Irvine for a degree in English and then entered law school at the UO. "I remembered Oregon from an Outward Bound program when I was 17," says Gibson, who has worked in private practice law in Eugene since graduation in 1979. Also a trained mediator, he encourages mediation to settle disputes.

Inspired by the Oscar-winning short film Teenage Father, Gibson got involved with Planned Parenthood in 1980. "I felt I could help counsel young men," he says. "But they asked me to serve on the board." He served on the national board from 1986-92 and has since chaired local and statewide boards. In 2013, Planned Parenthood of SW Oregon gave him the Margaret Sanger Award, named for the movement's founder. He also won last year's Joseph M. Kosydar Award for Professionalism, presented by the Lane County Bar Association.

ACTIVIST ALERT

• A free gathering to commemorate the 94th anniversary of women's suffrage will be at 3 pm Saturday, Aug. 23, at the Eugene Public Library. Kirk Taylor and Livvie Taylor-Young will present a scripted Power Point documentary complete with original music and photographs dating as far back as the 1800s.

• "Tacos Not Tar Sands" will feature a short documentary about the Unist'ot'en Camp, tacos and more at The Boreal (450 W. 3rd) from 6 to 9pm. Entry is free but a donation of $5-$10 is suggested. The camp in Canada is led by the Wet'suwet'en First Nation, "who have reclaimed traditional territories and are asserting control over their hereditary lands," and it seeks to protect the land from massive LNG and tar sands pipelines.

Join the Eugene SLUG Queens as they slime around downtown Eugene visiting local businesses. The SLUG Crawl departs Kesey Square at 4 pm, but you can stop by participating businesses any time on Aug. 23 and use the secret code “SLUG Queen” to enjoy a special discount. Participating businesses include: Townshend’s Tea, MECCA, Harlequin Beads, Heritage Drygoods, Party Downtown, Out on a Limb Gallery and more.

Applications are now being taken for the daytime or evening option of the OSU Extension Service Master Gardener Program in Lane County, one of the most popular volunteer programs in Oregon. The evening term option will be on Thursday nights starting Sept. 11 and again Jan. 15. The daytime option will meet Wednesdays starting Jan. 7. Applications and more information are at the OSU Extension Service, 996 Jefferson St., or online at wkly.ws/2m.

ChickTech will be hosting a workshop Aug. 23-24 at OSU to encourage high school girls to enter computing and technical fields. The nonprofit based in Portland fosters a more inviting culture for women in technology. The workshops culminate with a free show from 4:30 to 5:45 pm Sunday, Aug. 24, at the Kelley Engineering Center on the OSU campus.

The Active 20-30 Club of Eugene, a charitable organization serving underprivileged children, has partnered with Valley River Center on a school supply drive for students in need. The club is collecting new school supplies, including backpacks for elementary school students, through Friday, Aug. 22. The items can be dropped off at Valley River Center customer service booth outside of the JCPenney’s mall entrance. Donations will be distributed Aug. 23.

Darcie Herbert sent us this photo of a fire hydrant outside the buy2 convenience store downtown. Funny? Or another slap in the face to homeless folks who have no place to go?

LANDWATCH OPPOSES NEW HOUSES ON FORESTLANDS

Weyerhaeuser is a name long associated with timber, but back in 2010 the company became a REIT — real estate investment trust. Local land-preservation advocates from LandWatch Lane County say that Weyerhaeuser is one of the many landowners in the region moving property lines around on forestland to allow more houses to be built on what’s called an “impacted forest zone” on the edges of towns in Oregon.

Pointing to a document that was filed with the Lane County Land Management Division, Lauri Segel of LandWatch shows how one tax lot may consist of several deeds. One deed might be for a tiny bit of land, not large enough for a home. Another bit of land is nowhere near a driveway. Some of the deeds date back to the 1800s, she says. Landowners then apply to move property lines and build more homes — basically building a small subdivision in an otherwise rural area.

Landowners in the area who have applied to move property lines include Weyerhaeuser’s subsidiary WREDCo. (Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Development Company) and local developer Greg Demers, according to the documents LandWatch has obtained. The landowners ask the county to let them move property lines and build more homes on the tax lot while maintaining the property’s forest tax deferral. One application proposed to change 48.17 acres to a 5-acre property and a .55-acre property to 31.46 acres. “If it’s legal, I don’t think the Oregon land use system had this in mind,” Bob Emmons of LandWatch says.

Emmons adds, “What we are opposing now is Weyerhaeuser as a real estate company. We lose the [forest] resource, but they don’t lose the forest deferral.”

Matt Laird and Keir Miller of the Land Management Division say moving the property lines is indeed legal under Oregon state law. Impacted forestland is land that is closer to developed areas, Miller says, and consists of a smaller parcel size (80 acres or less) than the nonimpacted forestland that makes up most of Lane County.

Laird says most of the forestland in the county is protected from development under Oregon’s zoning laws. And he says that while moving the property lines on the impacted forestlands “might allow some rural home sites,” it “doesn’t allow you to extend out into deep rural areas.” He says the template for building homes on the impacted forestland forces clustering when new homes are built.

Segel says, “Lane County forestland is being parcelized without using subdivision and partitioning procedures.” — Camilla Mortensen

FUNDING FOR FULL-DAY KINDERGARTEN STILL UNCERTAIN

The data is in: Kids benefit academically when they attend kindergarten all day instead of half the day. An Oregon bill mandating that the state must pay for full-day kindergarten goes into effect in the 2015-2016 school year, and while the Oregon Department of Education (ODE) says it will fund the transition, some worry the funds won’t cover the full cost of implementation when districts switch from half-day to full-day.

According to Karen Twain, ODE’s director of literacy development, schools are not mandated to switch to full-day kindergarten next year, but if they do, they must offer it for free, with each kindergartner receiving added funding from the state.

The Eugene, Bethel and Springfield districts currently offer half-day kindergarten, and the latter two districts plan to switch to full-day next school year. Although 4J communications coordinator Kerry Delf says that while it is the district’s desire to offer full-day kindergarten, it is highly dependent on funding from the state and available classroom space.

Similarly, Springfield School District communications specialist Devon Ashbridge says via email that “it is too costly to offer full-day kindergarten without state reimbursement, and many of our families would be unable to shoulder the cost themselves.”

Bethel Community Relations Director Pat McGillivray says Bethel has some funds set aside for the switch, but the district is “working with legislators to see if the state can fund this mandate.”

“I think everybody on the board is tremendously supportive of having full-day kindergarten,” 4J board member Jim Torrey says. The problem is in funding: School districts receive a certain amount of funds per student, and currently, each kindergartner is only getting funding for half a day.

Next year, ODE will fund kindergartners for a full day of school, but according to Torrey, “We’re hearing that the state may not have funds to provide enough dollars to the statewide pool, and as a result, the pool will have a reduced amount of funds for not only our students but all the students in the state.”

He says members of the 4J school board are reaching out to members of the Oregon Legislature and Chief Education Officer Nancy Golden to make sure the overall dollar amount per student does not decrease.

Last school year, about 38 percent of Oregon public school kindergartners attended full-day kindergarten, and Twain says that schools funded those programs in a variety of ways, from charging parents to cover the additional cost to using district general funds.

Torrey says full-day kindergarten is key in helping kids read by third grade, which he notes as the “single highest predictor of success in students.” — Amy Schneider

SLANT

† If you are worried about public safety in Lane County, consider that this county has received $2,736,425 worth of surplus military equipment from the Department of Defense — more than any other Oregon county. That's according to an Aug. 15 Associated Press story in The Oregonian. Equipment includes one wheeled combat vehicle, 91 infrared illuminators, two ordnance disposal robots and 15 rifles. Coming free to cops across America, this surplus stuff was manufactured with our tax dollars. Watching the para-military debacle in Ferguson, Missouri, with all their old Department of Defense hardware makes us really worried about public safety everywhere. Hopefully, Congress will pass legislation to stop the lethal giveaways.

€ Yes have been on Ferguson, Missouri, since an 18-year-old unarmed black man was shot by police there Aug. 9. Brown's autopsy shows the young man was shot six times by police officer Darren Wilson. According to The Economist, last year British police fired their guns three times. Total. None of the shots were fatal. Police shootings and mass shootings have the same origins: too many guns in America.

• Lane County administrator Steve Mokrohisky has made it though his first 100 days and so far EW is impressed. Mokrohisky came by EW's offices last week and had thoughtful answers to our questions. He tells us his job is to objectively carry out the wishes of the elected officials — and he's got enough Midwestern sincerity that we believe him. At the same time, one of the first more public things Mokrohisky did when he took the job is move ahead with some simple fixes the county has been stalled on. He made some rooms in the Lane County Service Building available for public use again and made certain emails to and from the County Commission more accessible. Transparency builds trust.

♣ As we go to press the marchers in the Eugene Celebration Parade are prepping their costumes and their dance routines, the SLUG queens are putting on their finery for the SLUG crawl (see Biz Beat) and the Festival of Eugene looks like bit by bit it's come together. Lane Community College, which itself was once the beneficiary of a fundraising concert by the Grateful Dead, stepped up and was one of the contributors toward a post-parade Saturday night concert, and folks all over town have donated either to the festival or to the celebration. Look like Eugene loves its celebration and that's something the city and Eugene Celebration planners should take into account for next year.

† It's the end of summer and you know what that means ... the kids are going back to school and it's spider mating season. We are hitting the time of year when creepy pictures of large brown spiders start cropping up all over social media with captions like "What the hell is this?" and "Gahhhhh, this thing just crawled up my wall!" That thing is most likely a harmless giant house spider or a barn funnel spider looking to get laid. Normally spiders are pretty reticent, but this time of year the males come out of hiding as they desperately seek a mate. Before you drag out any nasty chemicals or squash that innocent bug-eating arachnid you should know that while Oregon has hobo spiders (though none documented south of Corvallis, last we checked), they rarely bite humans. Brown recluses do not live in Oregon, so while giant brown spiders in your bathroom might creep you out, they are not going to eat you.

A SPECTRUM RETIREMENT COMMUNITY

We WILL Celebrate!

A little tumult can't kill the buzz BY TED TAYLOR

This coming weekend will be a time to celebrate Eugene even if some of the names, venues and entertainment are not quite what we have been accustomed to in past decades. But Eugeneans are flexible, right?

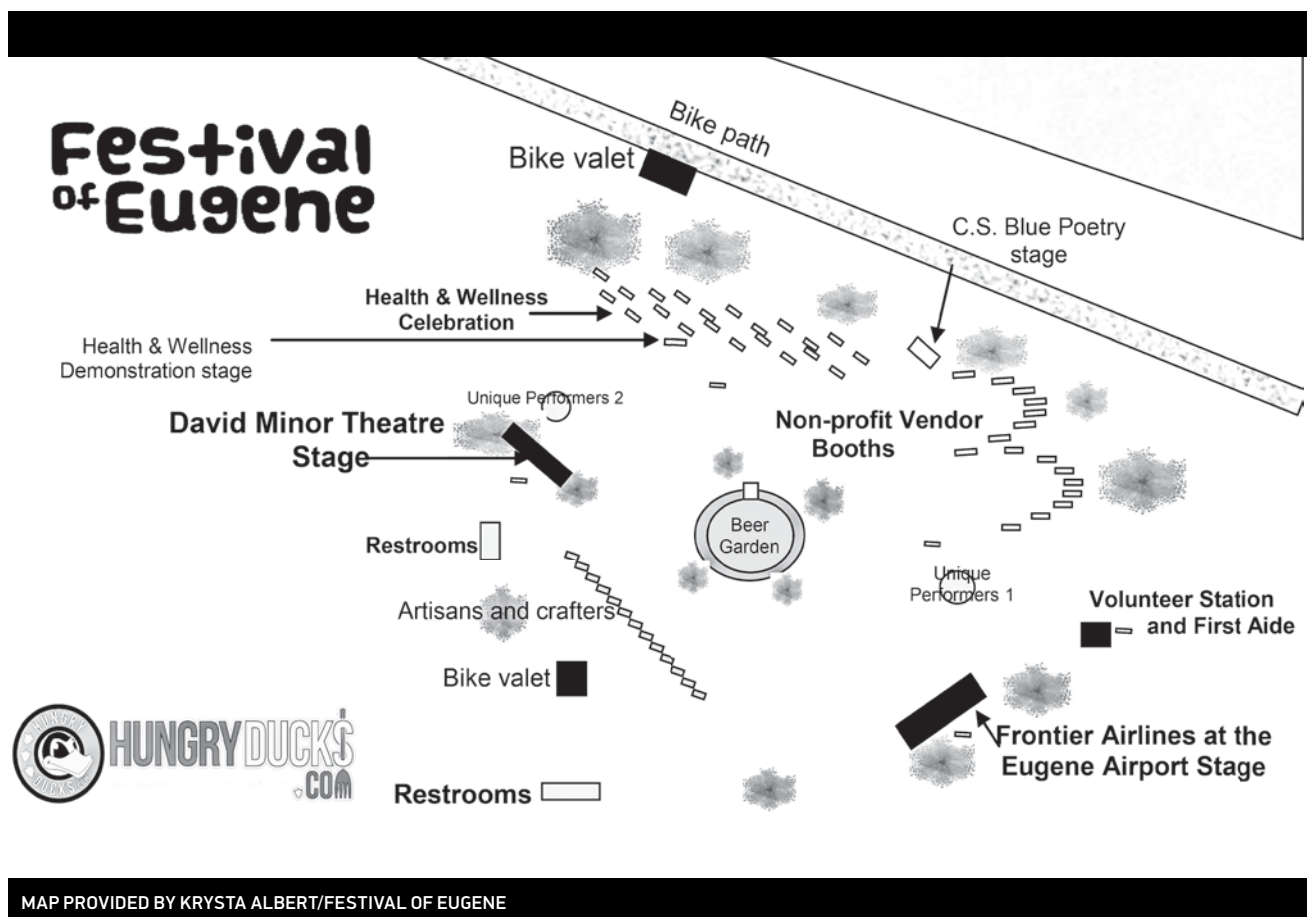

Familiar will be the Eugene Celebration Parade and Pet Parade Saturday, Aug. 23, followed by something new, a gathering outside Civic Stadium at the end of the parade for a rally. And Festival of Eugene is still happening as we go to press despite some moments of uncertainty as the new festival came together. Here's what we know to help you plan your weekend:

The annual Pet Parade will be at 10:30 am Saturday, making a one-block square, starting at 12th and High, heading north to 11th, then along 11th to Pearl, then down Pearl to 12th. Greenhill Humane Society sponsors the Pet Parade and the event draws hundreds of participants and spectators. (Yes, in previous years the Pet Parade was on Sundays.) Expect dogs in tutus and kids pulling wagons with everything from iguanas to chickens. Spectators watch for free, but the entry cost is $5.

The Eugene Celebration Parade with its political, social and often outrageous entries will begin at 11 am Saturday near South Eugene High School and head north along High Street to 11th where it will take a left and then head south on Pearl to end near the Civic Stadium parking lot. Staging for the parade begins at 8 am and entries will be judged for their entertainment value, creativity, concept and enthusiasm. Categories include Best Viewed, Best Dressed, Best in Step, Best Laughs, Best Listening, Kids are Best, Judges Know Best, Best Elementary/Middle School Entry, Best High School Band and Best of Show. First place winners get cash prizes. Parade watchers get giggles.

Civic Stadium will get some attention this year as everyone is invited for a rally and entertainment outside the stadium at the end of the parade. Samba Ja and Kudana bands in the parade will lead a procession to Civic for the gathering with "special guests," more music and refreshments. The rally is in support of efforts to save and restore the historic stadium and keep it from becoming another shopping center and parking lot.

Festival of Eugene was planned in a hurry following the surprise cancellation of the Eugene Celebration two months ago by Kesey Enterprises. Wedding and event planner Krysta Albert had already organized the Health and Wellness Celebration as part of the Eugene Celebration, and decided to expand it to fill the gap and make it free. The nonprofit Festival of Eugene started off downtown on 5th Avenue, but ran into time constraints and other problems. She then attempted to relocate to Alton Baker Park, and it finally landed at Skinner Butte Park, which is along the river and bike path a few blocks north of 5th Street Public Market. Donations and enthusiasm have kept this project alive despite numerous obstacles.

Last we heard, the festival is still on for Skinner Butte Park 4 to 10 pm Friday and 11 am to 10 pm Saturday. There will be local bands and musicians (see "Music Matters"), mixed in with comedy, DJs, poetry readings and other acts. Various for-profit vendors including mustache and face painters are planning booths and nonprofits like Friends of Civic, Cascadia Wildlands, NEDCO and Attachment Parents of Lane County are slated to participate. Albert says she anticipates one winery and two beer tents in a garden in the middle of the festival's footprint. Find updates at the Festival of Eugene Facebook page and information on booth prices at festivalofeugene.com.

Finally, a concert at Cuthbert for an unheard-of entry fee of $5 is planned at 5:30 pm Saturday, featuring Hell's Belles, Zepparella and Foreverland, billed as a "14-piece live tribute to Michael Jackson." Parade entry winners will be announced between sets at about 6:30 pm. For those who have never seen a show at the Cuthbert, this is an opportunity to experience a world-class venue. Bring a blanket. Beer, wine and food will be available. ■

Year of the Slug

Eugene's new SLUG queen Daniel Borson talks about his agenda BY BEN STONE

Daniel Borson has known that Bulbus Slimebledore was the stuff of queens since 2009. He was taken by the idea of a slug wizard, but allowed it to take backseat to some other magnetic personalities he's pulled out for SLUG (Society for the Legitimization of the Ubiquitous Gastropod) queen competitions over the years.

In 2008, Borson competed in the SLUG queen coronation as Ambassador Mucous Mulloscadia — a half-man, half-woman hybrid representing slugs' hermaphroditic nature. In 2009, he killed as Slimus O'Mulloskin, a singing leprechaun. In 2010, he played Little Orphan Sluggie, based loosely on the character from the musical Annie. And after a suspenseful two-year hiatus, Borson returned to the contest in 2013 in the robes of Slimebledore, shark-eyed and intent on winning. But with stiff competition from Queen Professor Doctor Mildred Slugwak Dresselhaus, Borson came up short once more.

"I knew that I had to run again," Borson says. "Because I knew that I was going to be queen some day."

And lo, Bulbus Slimebledore was crowned on Aug. 8, and is now preparing for a year as Eugene's "unofficial goodwill ambassador." Borson sat down with EW to talk about the future of our water supply, the true meaning of bribery, the Eugene Celebration and those boots.

What do slugs mean to you?

To me, the slug represents the ecosystem of our little area of the southern Willamette Valley. Given slugs' love of moisture and wetness and the very hot, dry summer that we're having this year, that's going to be challenging for slugs. Slugs feed birds, and birds are part of the ecosystem — to me [they're] representative of the whole web of nature that is really in a very precarious balance.

When the history books are written, what would you like them to say about your rain?

Given that my character is a parody of Professor Dumbledore and that Dumbledore is headmaster of a school, I also wanted to be about education, and specifically environmental education. Nearby Nature is one of my key charities — they do wonderful work in environmental education, summer camps, programs throughout the year for kids of all ages.

Are there any environmental issues specific to Eugene that you'd be meaning to look into in regards to environmental education?

I'd say probably the biggest ones are with respect to water and energy and sustainability. It doesn't rain as much here as we really like to think it does. As much as we like to think we have a lot of water, we're not immune to drought situations. Here in Eugene we have a precious resource with the Eugene Water and Electric Board (I happen to work for them). The McKenzie River water source to me is a very precious resource. Not only is it

'This is the world that we're leaving to our children, which gets back to why I think environmental education is so important. We are handing our children a planet, and along with that I think we need to hand them a user's guide.'

some of the best tasting water, it's relatively abundant — at least it is now. But with climate change, the snow pack in the Cascades is forecasted to diminish substantially.

One of the reasons that I've chosen to live in this part of the world is that the Northwest fares much better than most other areas of the world under climate change models. [Even so], we'll get drier. We will have more severe weather storms — just look at how cold it was during those ice storms this past winter.

And so, what does sustainability look like? What does energy usage look like? Energy production is one of the main sources of greenhouse gases and yet here we have tremendous potential for solar energy, a tremendous potential for wind energy. Our utility will have to adapt. Eugene will have to adapt. Oregon will have to adapt. This is the world that we're leaving to our children, which gets back to why I think environmental education is so important. We are handing our children a planet, and along with that I think we need to hand them a user's guide.

As you've developed the way you've run for SLUG queen over several years, what have you learned from old queens?

I think when I first ran I wanted to do it for my own ego and self-aggrandizement, and over the years I've moved beyond that to where I wanted it because I really believed that I had something to offer the position of SLUG queen. I feel like I'm in a unique position as SLUG queen here in 2014 given the uncertain future of the Eugene Celebration.

I've been in contact with the organizers of the Festival of Eugene and I hope that it moves forward. Definitely we'll have a presence there at the Festival. Then I'd like to use my platform as SLUG queen to help create a vision for something new and different for Eugene in the years to come.

So you see Eugene Celebration as a pretty meaningful institution to Eugene?

I don't see the Eugene Celebration per se [as meaningful], but I do see some kind of end of summer festival that's for us. Throughout summer there are all these other events: There's the Bach Festival, OFAM, there are track meets, there are all of these things that Eugene does to promote itself to the rest of the world.

And here, when all of that is all over and done with at the end of summer, we have a weekend where we can celebrate ourselves and celebrate what a wonderful and vibrant city we live in, both culturally and counter-culturally. That end of summer festival celebration party, whatever you want to call it, that's what as SLUG queen I am committed to preserving.

What are some things that you've bribed judges with?

Oh, I've bribed the judges with chocolate; last year I bribed the judges with a cartoon that Dan Pegoda did for the Something Eug! comic strip in EW. This year, though, I think I finally understood the true meaning of bribery. A couple of weeks ago I had a SLUG queen meet and greet at [a local] winery and I invited the old queens and I invited all the other contestants this year.

We just had a delightful time — having a winery tour, sampling all of the wine and figuring out who were going to be the designated drivers. And I realized the true meaning of the bribes is it's a way to get to know the queens. The best bribes were ones in which you didn't just give something to the old queens — although that might be nice, and as the old queens before me I will create an altar in my home as a place to put all things slug-related and slimy — but the bribes are really a way of connecting with the old queens and letting them know who you are. After all, there have only been 32 of us, and now we are the ones who get to decide who we want to let into our circle next year, and so we want to know if this is someone who we're going to enjoy hanging out with, enjoy making decisions with, enjoy partying with.

Are you committed to wearing your Bulbus Slimebledore robes year-round?

Oh, it's kind of bulky. I'm going to keep it through the parade weekend. But after that I have some lighter weight, less bulky costumes in the works. The [British] accent is a fixture, as is the purple velvet with slime green trim.

What about the boots?

And the boots — I will not get rid of those boots. You will have to pull my cold and decomposing body from them. And you may quote me on that. ■

The rubber meets the road Tuesday when Dr. Richard Chartoff discusses "The Condom of the Future" at the Eugene library. As leader of a team of UO scientists recently awarded a Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation "Grand Challenges Explorations" grant, Chartoff — an internationally respected expert in all things polymer — has been tasked with developing a space-age sheath that is at once stronger and more sensitive than your average jimmy hat. This lecture will envelope such issues as why an innovative condom is needed, the manner in which condoms are made and tested, as well as information on how a new "shape memory" polymers can custom-fit to individual weenises through a principle similar to "shrink wrap." This blessed event is free and open to the public; you need not be a member to attend.

"The Condom of the Future" is 6pm Tuesday, Aug. 26, at the downtown library. FREE. — Rick Levin

Aside from the late, great John Belushi's explosive imitation of a zit in the college cafeteria, perhaps the most memorable scene in National Lampoon's legendary 1978 comedy Animal House (partly shot in and around Eugene) is when the fraternity brothers take a drunken road trip where they get down to "Shout!" with Otis Day and the Knights. That scene was shot at the Dexter Lake Club, which on Saturday hosts the DVD release of *Animal House of Blues, a documentary about the making of the movie. Highlights of this toga party (TOGA! TOGA!) include live music from Mike Mitchell of The Kingsmen fame ("Louie Louie") and a performance by the man himself, DeWayne "Otis Day" Jessie. And, to quote Bluto: "Grab a brew. Don't cost nothin'" — to get in, that is.

The DVD release of Animal House of Blues is 6pm Saturday, Aug. 23, at Dexter Lake Club. FREE.

WOMEN IN WILDERNESS RUNS SEPT. 1-25 AT THE

ARTSHOUND

Sniffing out what you shouldn't miss in the arts this week

The rippling effects of Michael Gottfredson's departure from the UO presidency have hit the School of Architecture and Allied Arts (AAA). Former AAA dean Frances Bronet is now the acting senior vice president and provost for the university. Filling her spot as acting dean is Brook Muller, an associate professor in the Department of Architecture, a core faculty member of the environmental studies program and the AAA associate dean of academic affairs since 2012. In April 2014, Muller published Ecology and the Architectural Imagination.

Grantland: Lane Arts Council announced in its August newsletter the awarding of about $50,000 in grants through the Community Arts Program. The 24 local recipients were announced in two categories: programs and projects. The largest awardees in the program category are WOW Hall/Community Center for the Performing Arts with $6,000 for "performances and education programs" and Maude Kerns Art Center with $5,000 for "exhibits and education programs." In the projects category, the Willamette Jazz Society, the Bridgeway House, the Oregon Supported Living Program's Arts and Culture Program and Shakespeare in the Park were awarded the highest amount of $2,000. To see the full list of awardees, visit wkly.ws/1sw.

The Oregon Arts Commission also awarded 14 local arts grants in the areas of operating, arts learning and art services. The Eugene Symphony Association nabbed the largest grant at $32,300. Other recipients include Ballet Fantastique ($5,000), Eugene Concert Choir ($8,000), Cottage Theatre ($4,000), Eugene Springfield Youth Orchestras ($17,900) and Oregon Contemporary Theatre ($5,500).

In honor of the 50th anniversary of the Wilderness Act, the Brownsville Art Association and the Willamette Valley chapter of the Great Old Broads for Wilderness are hosting Women in Wilderness, with artworks (from illustrated field journals to photography) that "feature the interactions and relationships of women to wilderness." Original artwork can be submitted to the Brownsville Art Association Gallery (255 Main St.) Aug. 28-30. Contact willamettebroads@gmail.com for details.

Lucky 13: The Emerald Art Center hosts the 13th Annual McKenzie Art Festival Aug. 22-24 at the McKenzie Fire and Rescue Center in Leaburg, Oregon. The three-day fest will feature art, a plein air art competition and tours of restored vintage travel trailers with music by the Oregon Old Time Fiddlers, the Fiddlin' Sue Band and more. Visit emeraldartcenter.org for details.

THE WALK TO BURNING MAN

Eugene artist Joe Mross and crew build a steam walker for the Nevada festival

For a man currently wedged between a rock and that proverbial hard place, Eugene artist Joe Mross appears surprisingly serene. Here's the deal: Mross, a metalsmith and perhaps this town's foremost purveyor of the steampunk aesthetic, has but a handful of days to complete the grandest and most ambitious project of his life thus far — a 5,000-plus lbs. metallurgic behemoth of rivets, Plexiglas, fabricated steel and sandblasted wood that must be trucked down and set up for Nevada's legendary Burning Man festival by Aug. 25.

"This is huge," Mross tells me as we stand together inside his studio, beholding a work-in-progress that looks risen from the fevered dreams of Terry Gilliam and H.R. Giger. Mross fixes me with kind and vaguely bemused eyes. "This is the most complex piece I've ever built and designed," he says, smiling through the grit creased into his face. "The stage we're at we should have been at two months ago."

Even half-finished and standing propped on one leg in the middle of the studio, the piece Mross and crew are constructing is awesome to behold. "Lost Nomads of Vulcania" is a fantasy geek's wet dream. Described by Mross as a "gypsy encampment featuring the Teluriz, one of the few remaining Vardo Class Steam Walkers built by the last surviving members of Captain Nemo's crew," this exotically majestic structure resembles the AT-AT snow walkers that attack Hoth at the beginning of The Empire Strikes Back. "Lost Nomads" is at once pre- and post-apocalyptic, and its functional artistry blooms from some halted intersection of modernity and the early industrial revolution, where rococo complexity is rusted shut by the melancholy price of progress. It's a magnificent work of art.

To help finance the installation, Mross was granted one of Burning Man's rare honorariums, in which the festival offers a chunk of ticket revenues to support select art projects that are collaborative, interactive and community-oriented. And the term honorarium is apt: Most artwork at the fest is unfunded, and the grant is a nod to the magnitude of Mross' vision. He says that the Teluriz represents the culmination of everything he's learned so far in his career, starting with high-school metal shop and an arts degree at the University of Oregon, up through the commissioned metalwork he's sent around the globe as the proprietor of Archive Designs.

"I built a model with great detail," he says of the to-scale computer design for "Lost Nomads" he originally and sophistication Mross has applied in creating "Lost Nomads" — touches like the "TK-421" he's etched lightly into the metal foot-base, the serial code for the suit Luke Skywalker stole from an Imperial Stormtrooper in Star Wars. It's Easter eggs such as this, along with the fact that Mross and his rotating volunteer crew of nearly 20 people (eight of whom will travel with him to Burning Man) have fabricated nearly every piece of steel for the installation, that give this nouveau-archaic structure such a heightened sense of reality.

"I'm definitely in awe of it," says Elizabeth Anderson, the project manager Mross recently brought on board. Like many of the volunteers helping Mross, Anderson has spent her free time doing things like pounding bolt heads to give them that distressed steampunk look. "It's just really amazing he can make all these parts," she says.

As he stands before "Lost Nomads," Mross himself seems humbled by the scope of his own creation. "I haven't seen anything like this," he says of past installations at Burning Man. "This is going to be one of the things out there that people are going to say, 'That was one of my favorite spots to hang out.'"

Of course, simply transporting such an enormous work of art into the Nevada desert represents its own difficulties. According to Anderson, the crew will drive the Teluriz in pieces and install it on-site. "To do this, we're hauling most of our gear, tools and the legs of the Teluriz in a big-box moving truck," she explains, adding that the main body of the Teluriz will be pulled behind the truck in a flatbed trailer.

And what's to become of the Teluriz once the dust of Burning Man settles? Anderson says she and Mross have been thinking a lot about what to do with it. "It will definitely be an attraction, and we'd like to let the Teluriz travel a little bit," she says. "It's exciting and interactive, and we'd love to have it take a little tour around Oregon and beyond." ■ created in January, followed by the detailed blueprints he sent to Burning Man in March.

"It's just a gigantic prop, really," Mross continues, "but built authentically. I really want people who know something about metalwork to see it. It's period work, but it's from an alternate period," he says, explaining his steampunk aesthetic and the construed mythology inherent to the piece. "There's a lot of flexibility."

Apart from its sheer size, it's the filigreed flourishes and insider details that reveal the high degree of passion

Philip Seymour Hoffman shines, among others, in his final role

Based on a book by John le Carré and directed by Anton Corbijn (Control), A Most Wanted Man is a very adult thriller; with infinite patience, and without shedding a drop of blood, the film weaves an intricate web of espionage that swaps gadgets and guns for the trickier stuff of ambition, collusion and international realpolitik. As Bachmann's

But this movie rightly belongs to Hoffman. As a staunch, debauched and aging spy bitten by failure but driven by fractured hope, his performance is a masterstroke of subtle emotion and thwarted desire. When Hoffman walks sullenly out of the film's final frame, he looks like a ghost, a shadow passing into oblivion, never to return to this busted world. ■

There's much to like in this movie; it's not brilliant, and the fate of the world is never really in danger, but it's clever and glossy and all the things you'd expect from Marvel's B-team. Adventurous and funny, occasionally beautiful and never too stupid until, that is, it reminds half of its audience that it's not for us at all. In other words, it's got lady problems. Why does it seem like so much to ask that we not have to swallow a giant helping of casual sexism with our space action? (Valley River Center & Cinemark 17)

Over 12 years of making Boyhood, director Richard Linklater filmed his cast for a few days here, a few days there, capturing moments in the childhood of a boy named Mason — played throughout by Ellar Coltrane — and his family. The film flows so neatly from one moment to the next, from childhood bike rides to terrible stepfathers to high school girlfriends to the stumble into adulthood, that it's easy to forget what a risky endeavor the whole thing was. Nearly every scene in Boyhood is beautifully true to the moment it depicts, whether that moment involves teenage boys posturing toughness or a dad making his daughter cringe with a talk about condoms. Every year, Linklater and his actors did something beautiful. As a whole, the movie is observational, natural, likable — a ballsy project made life-sized by the mundane. ## GO WEST, YOUNG MAN

"We love playing house concerts because it's always a listening audience," says Jeff Poynter, vocalist and accordion player for Victoria, B.C.-based indie-folk outfit West My Friend. "We're not really a bar band, and so we like audiences that show up to hear music. It's great as well because you can really connect with the audience — talk to them throughout the show, hang out with them afterwards and learn a little about them."

West My Friend is playing a house show in Eugene as part of their "Bikes, Barns and Beers" tour. How could a tour called that not stop in Eugene? The band is touring in support of this year's When the Ink Dries, a precious collection of dreamy, gentle and literate indie folk with instrumentation like flute and mandolin.

"Cascadian third-wave indie-prog-chamber-folk-roots music" Poynter says, describing the record, adding "love songs in unusual time signatures and orchestral epics with intriguing lyrics and four-part harmonies."

West My Friend's show is their first time playing in town. But that doesn't mean West My Friend has never been to Eugene. "We once camped out in the train station parking lot in a 1982 Glendale RV for two nights," Poynter says. "We thought it was a pretty rad town and are super excited to come back! It seemed like a town where our kind of music would be really well received, and where there would be great audiences."

West My Friend plays 7 pm Monday, Aug. 25, at 755 River Rd.; $10-$12 suggested donation. RSVP recommended; contact Mike Meyer at mmeyer@efn.org. — William Kennedy

ALL TOGETHER NOW

With its Harvest Records 2014 debut Badillac, popular SoCal pop-punk act together PANGEA take a huge sonic leap forward, beyond simple-minded garage-punk into more depth and sincerity. “It might be confusing for people, assuming we’re like this garage-punk band and then hearing this record,” says together PANGEA singer-songwriter and guitarist William Keegan on the band’s website. “But we really don’t want to get trapped at all.”

While the band (formerly just Pangea) has evolved, don’t think for one instant together PANGEA has grown up. Badillac is full of snot-nosed energy, scab-picking punk attitude and who-gives-a-shit production value. Track one “Alive” is as heavy as Black Flag, the track “Badillac” should be rock single of the year and “Depress” features Keegan shrieking the Kurt Cobain-Frank Black-esque “Depress! Depress! Depress!” “Sick Shit” features the profoundly juvenile couplet: “My dick is soft/ These things mean nothing to me” (this is, after all, the same band that sings “Too Drunk to Come” from 2011’s Living Dummy).

“To me, the album is so obviously influenced by the shit that I was listening to when I was 16,” Keegan continues, “Growing up in the ’90s, all that stuff — Nirvana, Smashing Pumpkins, Weezer. For whatever reason, the music you listened to when you’re confused and young gets in deeper than anything you might listen to later.”

But here’s the things: Along with Cloud Nothings’ Dylan Baldi, together PANGEA vocalist William Keegan might just be one of the millennial generation’s best and most surprising young songwriters. If together PANGEA doesn’t quicken your pulse you might already be dead.

together Pangea play with Oakland’s surf rockers Meat Market 8 pm Wednesday, Aug. 27, at Cozmic; $8 advance, $10 door. — William Kennedy

Black cats can seem to appear out of nowhere. Only flashes of gold between blinks indicate that a shadow is anything but. The long-haired ones, surprisingly light-weight when they settle into your lap, resemble dark, drifting clouds. Ragamuffin, with her tufted mane and tail, envelops her loved ones with purring darkness. Now floating alone, she waits at Greenhill for the approach of a kindred storm.

Primp your Pooch, Costume your Cat, and Flaunt your Feathers for Greenhill's Peace, Love and Pets Eugene Celebration Parade on Saturday, August 23rd! Registration begins at 9:30am at 12th & High in downtown Eugene. Learn more at www.Green-Hill.org

FREE WILL ASTROLOGY

BY ROB BREZNY

ARIES (March 21-April 19): An American named Kevin Shelley accomplished a feat worthy of inclusion in the Guinness Book of World Records. While wearing a blue satin martial arts outfit, he smashed 46 wooden toilet seats over his head in just one minute. Some observers may be inclined to dismiss his efforts as frivolous and ridiculous. But I admire how he playfully mocked his own competitiveness while fully expressing his competitiveness. He satirized his ego's drive to be first and best even as achieved the goal of being first and best. I recommend you try something similar. You're entering a phase when you'll be wise to add a bit of humility to your bold self-presentation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are about to make the transition from plodding to skipping, from moping to exulting. You will no longer be bogged down by cloudy doubt, but will instead be buoyed by giddy hope. To what do we owe this imminent turnaround in your fortunes? One reason is that it's Justifiable Narcissism Week — for Tauruses only. During this jubilee, the Free Will Astrology Council on Extreme Self-Esteem authorizes you to engage in unabashed self-worship — and to corral a host of other people who want to join in celebrating you, praising you, and helping you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An eagle does not catch flies. A lion won't hunt for mice. A gourmet chef shuns recipes that call for canned soup and potato chips. And I trust that you won't indulge a hankering for non-nutritious sweets and treats that would spoil your appetite for more robust sustenance. You understand I'm not just talking about your literal eating habits, right? Interpret this oracle metaphorically, please.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Now is an excellent time to phase out fantasies that bog you down or drag you backward. Are you up for that challenge? Can you summon the courage to leave the mediocre past behind? If so, here are your assignments: Wean yourself of longings to reconstruct bygone pleasures. Forget about trying to be like the person you used to be and to have the keys you used to have. Stop feeding the feelings that keep you affixed to obsolete goals. Break any taboo that makes you scared to change what needs to be changed.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The artist Amedeo Modigliani lived in Paris from 1906 until his death in 1920. For most of that time, he was destitute. Proprietors of local stores and restaurants sometimes accepted his art work as payment in lieu of actual money. They didn't necessarily appreciate it, though. One food seller used Modigliani's drawings as wraps for the fried potatoes he sold. Another stashed the artist's paintings in his cellar, where they turned into feasts for rodents. Too bad for these short-sighted people and their heirs: The worth of Modigliani's works eventually increased, and some sold for millions of dollars. In the weeks ahead, Leo, don't be like those food sellers. Know the value of what you have, even if it's still latent.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): I've got three new vocabulary words for you. I need them to provide you with the proper oracle. First is the German term schwellenangst. It refers to timidity or nervousness about crossing a threshold and heading into unknown territory. The second word is a new English term, "strikhedonia." It means the joy that rises up when you feel the courage to say "to hell with it." The third word is from Portuguese: desenrascanço. It means the spontaneous improvisation of haphazard but ultimately effective plans. Now let's put them all together: To conquer your schwellenangst, you must summon a bolt of strikhedonia and have faith in your ability to carry out desenrascanço. [Thanks to other-wordly.tumblr.com for the new words.]

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Desire can conquer fear. Love trumps cowardice. The power that your tenderness affords you may not completely dissolve your doubt and worry, but it will quiet them down so much that they will lose their ability to paralyze you. These truths are always good to keep in mind, of course, but they are especially useful to you right now. No obstacle will faze you, no shadow will intimidate you, as long as you feed your holy longing and unshakable compassion.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): On Aug. 2, 1830, Louis Antoine, Duke of Angoulême, was king of France for 20 minutes. [It's a long story.] I offer this to you as a cautionary tale. A few weeks from now, I don't want to have to be comparing you to him. If you hope to hold your new position or continue to wield your added clout for longer than just a little while, you should take all necessary steps. How? Nurture the web of support that will sustain you, for example. Don't burn a single bridge. Cultivate real empathy, not just the showy kind. Avoid manipulative behavior, even if you think you can get away with it. Be a skillful gatherer of information.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Golda Meir was prime minister of Israel from 1969 to 1974. Her admirers described her as "strong-willed, straight-talking, grey-bunned grandmother of the Jewish people." She had a good sense of humor, too. "Let me tell you the one thing I have against Moses," she said. "He took us 40 years into the desert in order to bring us to the one place in the Middle East that has no oil." I bring this up as a teaching story for you, Sagittarius. If you plan to make any big moves, transitions, or journeys in the coming months, I suggest you choose destinations that will allow you to gain access to wealth-building resources.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do you know what phase of your cycle it is? Here are a few hints. It doesn't come around often. It's not characterized by predictable events or boring certainties. And it may allow you, even encourage you, to take a break from being your usual self. Give up? OK. I'll tell you. You have entered the Nicholas Cage Phase of your cycle. Cage is a Capricorn, but not a typical one. He's eccentric and manic and certifiably batty. He refers to his acting technique as "Nouveau Shamanic," once lived in a fake castle, and owns a Lamborghini that belonged to the legendary tyrant, the Shah of Iran. For our current purposes, he has also testified, "I am not a demon. I am a lizard, a shark, a heat-seeking panther. I want to be Bob Denver on acid playing the accordion."

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Here's one of my goals in life, Aquarius: to show you a type of astrology that does not infringe on your free will, but rather clarifies your options. In this horoscope, for instance, I will outline your alternatives so that you will be fully informed as you determine what course of action will be most closely aligned with your high ideals. Ponder the following question, and then briskly exert your freedom of choice: Would you prefer to have love make your head spin, knock you off your feet, tickle your X-factor, kick you gently but firmly in the ass, or all of the above?

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): "God changes caterpillars into butterflies, sand into pearls, and coal into diamonds by using time and pressure," says pastor Rick Warren. "He is working on you, too." Let's make that idea your meditation, Pisces. If the word "God" doesn't suit you, substitute "life," "nature" or "Wakan Tanka," the Lakotan term for "The Great Mystery." The essential point is that you are being worked on and shaped by forces beyond your conscious awareness. Some of them are vast and impersonal, like your culture, the media, and the entertainment industry. Others are intimate and close at hand, like your genes, your childhood imprints, and the characters you encounter daily. Now is an excellent time to contemplate all the influences that make you who you are.

HOMEWORK: What idea, feeling, or attitude are you enslaved to? What can you do to escape your slavery? Write Truthrooster@gmail.com.

HANGING WALLPAPER

all afternoon! We do great work together. Let me know when I can help make it more beautiful again!

HEATHER @ COUNTRY FAIR

You appeared next to me near the hippie hatchery on Sunday afternoon. We walked and talked about our passion for creating metal and leather art. I felt a great connection and would love to continue our walk. When: Sunday July 13th, 2014. Where: @ Country Fair. You: Woman. Me: Masked Man.

I ALWAYS GO TO YOUR AISLE

You complimented my Adventure Time shirt. Your stache is spectacular. and your hips don't lie. You: Sam H. Me: Intrigued

I seen you walking thru the bus station.. You were catching the 51... You were wearing a Ghost Busters t-shirt , Short red hair ,and white jeans....I wanted to talk to you but didn't....I feel like I miss the opportunity that you only get once in a life time. When:wednesday: May 13th 2014. Where:10th & Willamette. Me: Women. You: Women.

ONE SMALL STEP FOR MAN

We ran into each other on the way out of the Y. I said something about continuing to awkwardly not walk the same pace and then wished I'd asked for your name when we parted ways. You: Man Me: Woman

RASTAFLAG SEEKS BLOCK PARTY BEAUTY

Katherine we met at the Block Party. Your friend called me Iggy Pop. We talked and shared and then you had to leave. Let's connect and share again! Where: Whiteaker Block Party 2014. You: woman Me: man

SAVAGE LOVE  OBJECT TRANSFERENCE
BY DAN SAVAGE

I'm a twentysomething genetic male. I thought for a while that I might be trans, but I ended up deciding that while I hate my masculine features and like girl clothes and want to be "cute," I have no desire to be female and don't want to have breasts or a vagina. I also don't identify with a particular sexual orientation, as I don't find the concept useful. I've been with both boys and girls, and currently I'm with a trans girl. I've never been a fan of real-people pornography, but recently I've found myself indulging in trans-girl porn. Is it insensitive to have a predilection for trans girls? My girlfriend wants to get sex-reassignment surgery (SRS) in the future, and while I support her wholeheartedly and have never said anything to indicate otherwise, I think she knows that I'm happy with her current set of equipment and I don't have any desire for her to go through with SRS. I believe she resents me for this. But this isn't a relationship question. My question is more of a catchall: Is it insensitive, as a rule, to be attracted to trans (or intersex) girls? I like to think of myself as sexually progressive, and I don't want to objectify or disrespect anybody. I just think trans girls are real cuties.

Unavoidable Gender Hullabaloo

"Having a sexual preference—whether it's liking guys with red hair, tall women, sports fans, blue-eyed agender individuals, men with vaginas, or women with penises—is fine," said Parker Marie Molloy, a freelance writer and trans media activist whose writing has appeared in the New York Times and the Advocate and on Slate. "So long as the preference is not the sole reason for the attraction, so long as UGH remembers that trans people are actually human beings with a diverse range of emotions, interests, and experiences, and aren't solely defined by their transness, UGH should be able to avoid coming off as creepy." Building on Molloy's point: If the only thing you like about your current girlfriend is the fact that she's trans, you're probably guilty of objectifying her. But if her trans-girl cuteness is one of the things you find attractive about her—even if it's the thing that initially drew you to her, even if it's something you focus on during sex—you're not objectifying.

"As is the case with any sort of physical, emotional, or sexual attraction, a preference crosses over into the realm of objectification only when the person's potential love interest is reduced to a single aspect of their life," said Molloy. "So UGH's preference for trans women is only insensitive and objectifying if UGH makes it insensitive and objectifying."

Molloy is right: No one wants to be reduced to a single aspect of their life by a romantic partner or anyone else. But being objectified in short, concentrated bursts by a lover isn't a problem for most people—quite the opposite, in fact. Being objectified by someone who doesn't care about the rest of you? Most people don't find that sexy. Being briefly objectified by someone who loves the particular thing/things you bring to the table/mattress/sling and the rest of you too? Most people find that fucking sexy.

Finally, UGH, while I had Molloy on the line, I asked her to quickly address the issues of trans porn and SRS. "It's no more wrong to indulge in trans porn than it is to indulge in porn starring or created by cis people," said Molloy. "Whether UGH's favorite trans-porn outlets are stories, pictures, or drawings—or if they're videos of mainstream trans porn stars like Bailey Jay or independent queer-feminist performers like Chelsea Poe—UGH shouldn't feel ashamed. As to whether his girlfriend gets SRS, that's something that has to be up to her. Quiet resentment, guilt, and pressure to have or not have surgery should serve as signs that maybe this relationship doesn't have much of a future. I suggest that the two of them sit down and have a long talk about genitals, preferences, and deal breakers."

Follow Parker Marie Molloy on Twitter @ParkerMolloy.

If a woman writes in her Craigslist hookup ad that she is a "bigger beautiful woman," is there a polite way to press her for more specific details? How can I determine what she means by that? Or is it always inherently rude to ask a self-proclaimed BBW just how much she weighs and how big she actually is—to determine if one will be attracted to her?

Befuddled Baffled Wonderer

If we were talking about personal ads on sites where people look for relationships—Match.com, OkCupid, Gun Lovers Passions, etc.—it would indeed be rude to ask someone precisely how big she is. In that case, I would suggest going on a low-stakes, no-expectations date instead and having a look/actual human interaction. But we're not talking about a dating website, BBW, we're talking NSA hookup ads on Craigslist. We're talking about a virtual meat market. And when you're in a meat market—literally or figuratively, physically or virtually—there's nothing wrong with asking a polite, direct question about the meat on offer.

I am a bi man married to a straight woman for 10 years. We are in a wonderful GGG relationship. On a pretty regular basis, we invite others into the bedroom for fun. We have one friend who we do this with weekly. Because he is here so often, a bit of his clothing and a few other essentials are stored in our guest room. We are careful to hide our monogamish lifestyle from those who might unfairly judge us, but we figured a few pieces of clothing and a friend who "crashes" with us on the weekends wouldn't raise too many eyebrows, right? Wrong. My snooping mother-in-law found a drawer with boxers that were obviously not my size, lube, and a butt plug. Apparently that jazzed her up, and she continued to snoop so that she could "find evidence if I was cheating." She found gay pornography in our bedroom and a few ambiguous text messages. She had no reason to look in any drawers—or phones!—and I'm infuriated at the invasion of our privacy. Now she thinks her daughter is married to a closeted gay man. I want to tell her the truth, but my wife does not. MIL is religious/conservative, and she may disown my wife if she finds out our marriage is often a threesome. What's the right thing to do here?

Not In The Closet

You should tell your MIL to shove her fucking money—the inheritance your wife might lose if her mother were to disown her—up her religious/conservative ass. (I can only assume the stress about being disowned involves an inheritance, aka big money; otherwise, there is no downside to being disowned by this bitch.) But if your wife places a higher value on her mom's money than she does on her own independence and your shared right to marital privacy, NITC, then she should tell her mother that the plug and the gay porn are hers. (Shrug off the ambiguous text messages.) Lots of straight married women with 100 percent straight husbands enjoy gay porn. (Most slash fiction is written by and for straight women—why not send MIL some links?) I guess it boils down to which will be the greater torment for your MIL (and therefore likelier grounds for disinheritance): the whole truth (her daughter and bisexual SIL are sinful, nonmonogamous perverts) or the face-saving lie (her daughter being a bit of a perv).
